Harper Grey has been at the forefront of e-discovery and document storage, management and retention. With the rise in electronic communication, we have kept pace with the demands of turning seemingly insurmountable mountains of data arising from litigation into strategically identified and manageable segments. The role that our litigation support professionals play in managing the technical challenges of the e-Discovery lifecycle is vital to allowing our lawyers and clients to focus on reviewing and presenting relevant documents. As we continue to build on our in-house e-discovery and review capabilities we have formalized our Litigation Support & E-Discovery Services department.

“Formalizing this department, whose sole focus is on e-discovery matters, will enable us to better serve the needs of the firm’s strong litigation practices going forward, says Dharam Dheensaw, Chief Information Officer of Harper Grey. “We drive value for our clients through innovation in service delivery. Consolidating our e-discovery expertise enhances our ability to contain costs which benefits our clients across all practice areas.”
